Leadership for the Education Field

Judith Schechtman, M.S.W. (Judy) is a Senior Consultant and partner in Triangle Associates, an international consultancy specializing in higher, independent and international education. She is a clinical social worker by training, having taught as an adjunct professor at Washington University, St. Louis. Ms. Schechtman facilitates governance workshops, leadership development programs, and strategic planning in the United States and around the world, and coaches numerous senior leaders in independent schools. Her clients include schools in Europe, Asia and North America, including large and small institutions.

Her accomplishments include the development of evaluation methodologies for governing boards and senior academic and administrative leaders, co-founding the School Leadership Institute for the National Association of Independent Schools, being on the faculty of a major leadership development program for land-grant universities in the United States, and authoring or co-authoring numerous articles and white papers on issues in governance and leadership of schools and universities.

Ms. Schechtman is a former board member of Forsyth School (St. Louis). She lives in St. Louis with her husband, Richard. Their daughter, Lisa Schechtman and her husband Vlad Dorjets live and work in Washington D.C. Ms. Schechtman's undergraduate degree is from Northwestern University and her Master's is from Washington University. Ms. Schechtman has been part of Triangle Associates for over 20 years.
